Paradigm Lost: The Côa Valley and the Open-Air Palaeolithic Art in Portugal

November 4, 2009 by Paul Bahn Filed Under: Issue 38, Books

Produced to mark the 10th anniversary of the open-air Palaeolithic art of Portugal's Côa Valley becoming a World Heritage site, this beautiful book comprises numerous fantastic colour photos (mostly taken at night) and equally remarkable colour tracings of hundreds of figures, not only from the Côa Valley but also from the ever-growing list of similar (but far less important) sites in other parts of Portugal. Both text and illustrations make this an authoritative and indispensable account, since Baptista has been in charge of documenting this art from the beginning. He and his team are among the finest recorders of rock art in the world, as this book demonstrates admirably.

WELCOME TO WORLD ARCHAEOLOGY

Welcome to Current World Archaeology, the magazine that studies archaeology round the world.

CWA was founded in 2003 as a sister magazine to Current Archaeology which, since 1967, has been reporting on the latest discoveries in British archaeology.

But CWA does not just look at the latest discoveries: it also travels the globe, looking at great monuments around the world, explaining how they came to be the sites - and sights - we see today.
